

To whom it may concern:

My daughter, Janie, has been in Mr. Janes' class for one semester for Spanish and Journalism/yearbook. During that time, Mr. Janes has been an excellent teacher. In speaking with him during parent teacher conferences, he has conducted himself in a fair and professional manner, being very attentive to my needs as a parent. Because of these qualities, I feel that Mr. Janes would be an outstanding candidate for the teaching positions he may be seeking. He is honest, fair, and willing to discuss whatever I have need of not only during school hours, but after as well. Janie has benefited tremendously being in his classroom where Mr. Janes has instilled positive moral values as well as encouragement to do her best.

I appreciate Mr. Janes' dedication to his profession and to the students. At this point, Janie will add her input:

My current teacher, Mr. Janes, has given me tremendous help in Spanish and yearbook and journalism. He knows about our boundaries, meaning if he sees that we're struggling, he helps us through it in an easier way to understand so that we keep up a passing grade. He is such a great teacher. Mr. Janes knows how to be laid back, but also keep us up with the work he assigns. He's always open for new ideas and activities to do in the classroom to make studies for the students more interesting.

I believe he deserves any job he is applying for. The moment my mom told me that my teacher, Mr. Janes, asked her to write this letter for the position he is applying for, I was very thrilled. However, I was also sad to discover that he would be leaving our school here after this year.

In conclusion, from me knowing my former teacher, I believe he deserves any job he applies for. He has had tons of experiences in actually going someplace to use his knowledge of Spanish and with his knowledge of computers and English, he edits our school paper to make it sound the best he can.

Sincerely,
